

Migrant workers and the resilience of the long-term care sector in England

Shereen Hussein, Florin Vadean, Agnes Turnpenny and Eirini Saloniki

Disclaimer

Sustainable Care is funded by the Economic and Social Research Council (award ES/P009255/1, Sustainable Care: connecting people and systems, 2017-21, Principal Investigator Sue Yeandle, University of Sheffield).

The Retention and Sustainability of Social Care Workforce (RESSCW) project is a collaboration between the University of Kent, University College London, City University, and Skills for Care. It is funded by the Health Foundation's Efficiency Research Programme (award reference number: 1325587). The Health Foundation is an independent charity committed to bringing about better health and health care for people in the UK.

The landscape

- Migrants' contribution to the English LTC sector
  - Changes and continuity
- Staff turnover and job vacancies
- Brexit and new immigration systems
- COVID-19 and the LTC labour supply
- Local market dynamics
- LTC sector resilience during system shocks – British vs. migrant workers' contribution

Implications: short and long term

- The 'opposing' COVID-19 and Brexit forces
- Training, commitment and retention: key components of resilience
- Harnessing opportunities: from temporality to stability
- LTC provisions: potential changes
- Quality of work and services
- Safeguarding and rights: the migrant workers' position

Thank you for listening

@DrShereeHussein

S.A.Hussein@kent.ac.uk

Shereen.Hussein@LSHTM.ac.uk

